It will be remembered that on that night there was a masquerade ball at Smithnight the original at the steamers was a masquerade ball at Smithnight the original at the steamers was a masquerade ball at Smithnight the original at the steamers while the Orlando had her lines attached to the Passport, being on the outside. At about 11 o'clock they were in their proper positions at the wharf. At 2 o'clock in the morning, when Captain Harper and a friend, fatigued with the night's pleasures, and anxious to secure a little rest preparatory to the duties of the coming day, started to go on board they found both boats missing, having evidently been set adrift. Captain Harper and his friend procured a pilot's skiff and started out to hunt the missing steamers, and finally discovered them on the shoals between the main channel what is known as Snow's-Marsh channel, opposite Fort Fisher. The en-gineer and fireman of the Passport were in their berths asleep, and Cap-tain Williams and crew of the Orlando were in the same unconscious state when the boats were turned adrift. When Cap-tain Harper arrived in sight of the steam-ers those on board were in the act of getting up steam, the jar of the boats when they struck upon the shoals having awakened them. The boats were gotten off the shoals without much difficulty, and steamed back to Smithville. The night was intensely
